

Tuesday evening Trustee Homer Bosworth received a telegram announcing the death of his brother, C. L. Bosworth, which occurred that day at Merom, Indiana, where he was taking literary course in the Christian college. The remains arrived here Wednesday night at midnight accompanied by his wife and brother, Anthony and were conveyed to the home of his father, Augustus Bosworth. The deceased was a well known and highly esteemed gentleman and was well known throughout the county, having been engaged as a school teacher, in which calling he was very successful, being well liked by his pupils.

His death was caused by Morphine. Tuesday morning at nine o'clock his wife tried to wake him, but could not do so. She called physicians, who informed her that he was under the influence of morphine. They worked with him until seven o'clock when he died without being roused from his fatal sleep.

The funeral occurred Thursday morning at 10:30 and was one of the largest ever held there. Revs. Pierce and Stovenour spoke; interment at Liber.

Portland Sun, Jay County, IN; June 14, 1895

Contributed by Jim Cox